8. On information and belief, defendant Kaspersky is in the business of developing and marketing various computer protection and security software programs, including anti-virus protection. Kaspersky markets and distributes computer protection and security software programs under its own name, and also sells such programs to distributors and other original equipment manufacturers ("OEMs").

Damage to Zango website

- 9. On March 8, 2007, Zango's testing lab discovered that Kaspersky's consumer program "Kaspersky Internet Security" ("KIS") was damaging a Zango website named seekmo.com by removing Zango weblinks from computers running the KIS program. Further tests revealed that KIS was damaging and removing promotional links hosted by Zango publishers as well. Zango contacted Kaspersky on March 9, 2007, regarding the damage being done by KIS. On March 12, 2007, Kaspersky admitted that KIS was damaging Zango's website and requested time to fix the issue. Testing performed by Zango's lab on March 14, 2007 showed that KIS was no longer damaging Zango's webpage.
- On March 21, 2007, Zango's lab discovered that similar damage (i.e., missing web links) was being caused by companies that, upon information and belief, were OEM customers of Kaspersky's anti-virus engine product ("KAV"). Zango notified one of these OEM customers immediately. On March 22, 2007, Zango notified a second OEM using KAV that it was damaging Zango's website. On March 28, 2007, the second OEM resolved the issue, and stated in communications with Zango that Zango was using "Best Practices," and that Zango's products are "not malicious." The first OEM requested additional time to

On May 21, 2007 Zango testing revealed that some Kaspersky OFM customers 11. are still damaging Zango websites and removing download links, without providing any customer notice or warning. This was determined despite assurances Kaspersky made to Zango six weeks carlier that the damage to Zango's websites would be remedied

Interference with Zango programs

- On May 8, 2007, Zango informed Kaspersky via email that Zango testing had identified additional "major issues" regarding the manner in which KIS treated Zango's software applications. Testing revealed that, once KIS was running on a user's computer, a user was allegedly given a choice to "Allow" Zango's programs to run. However, the "Allow" choice offered by KIS proved illusory, as KIS continually caused warnings to appear on the user's screen no matter how many times the Zango customer clicked "Allow." Testing revealed that KIS did not treat the software of a known Zango competitor in the same manner.
- On May 21, 2007, Zango testing of KIS version 6.0.2.621 revealed an eyea more serious attack on Zango. Once this version of KIS is installed, it blocks any installation of Zango software, and blocks users from accessing Zango content. In addition, KIS still causes a user to click "Allow" every time Zango attempts to deliver an ad; this is true even if the user clicks "Always Allow."
- In the course of blocking installation of Zango's software, KIS identifies 14. Zango products as "malicious" and as an "infection." On information and belief, Kaspersky knows full well that this is a false and misleading description, as Kaspersky researchers have reviewed the Zango software and determined that it is not malicious
- Additional testing performed on May 21, 2007, revealed that KIS damages 15. Zango's products in such a way that the computer user is unable to uninstall Zango. The inability to unjustall the Zango software through normal Add/Remove procedures is a direct violetion of Zango's terms of service.

Kaspersky's actions have resulted (and will continue to result) in alguificant damage to Zango's reputation, customer base and business model. That damage includes: damaging Zango's website so as to prevent future customers from downloading Zango products; blocking installation of Zango products by future customers; interfering with Zango's ability to recoup, through both paid and ad-supported software versions, the cost of acquiring and licensing for distribution the extensive content in Zango's content catalog (estimated value: several million dollars); chilling Zango's ability to partner with new content providers and distribution channels, thereby hindering Zango's expansion plans and devaluing its investment in offices, operations, infrastructure, and employees in Washington state. North America, and other parts of the world; and in other ways not yet realized or fully understood.
